The Audit Process

We believe that a frank and open relationship results in a more responsible and insightful audit. And, within the bounds of public interest, we work hard at really understanding you, your business and the potential risks.

Therefore before conducting an audit we ensure that we understand you and your business better, the risks that you face as an organization, how these risks affect your financial statements and the relevant regulatory requirements that you have to comply with.

Your business understanding helps us to determine the sources of audit evidence and the audit procedures that we follow when carrying out the audit process. This helps us to make the results as transparent as possible to withstand public scrutiny.
